MUSSOLINI'S SPOKESMAN CLAIMS SANCTIONS AGAINST ITALY MUST BE CANCELLED UNLESS ECONOMIC STEPS ARE TAKEN AGAINST NAZIS

Such Viewpoint Presented to Council of League of Nations—Italy Likely to Insist Sanctions Be Removed Before Peace Terms Are Offered to Abyssinia—"Injustice" Claimed

(By International News Service)

ROME, Mar. 11—Unless economic measures are taken against Germany as a result of Hitler's invasion of the Rhineland, sanctions against Italy must be cancelled.

This viewpoint will be presented to the Council of the League of Nations, Saturday, in London, by Premier Mussolini's spokesman, it was learned today.

At the same time Italy is likely to insist that sanctions must be removed before any concrete peace terms are offered to Abyssinia.

Whether Dino Grandi, Ambassador to London, or Baron Pompeo Aloisi, Mussolini's usual League representative, will be the Italian delegate in London, is so far unknown.

The delegate in any case will point out the "injustice and absurdity" of a plan which might permit Germany to escape the sanctions that were applied against Italy. On this agreement, Italy will base her attack on the League sanctions.

While today, military communique from Ethiopia said for the second time, "there is nothing to report from either front," there were official hints that Mussolini wants more territory behind the Ethiopian army before peace starts.

PARIS, Mar. 11—(INS)—Great Britain took charge of Europe today.

For the first time since German and French troops faced each other after Hitler's "thunder clap," a faint possibility of a peaceful settlement appeared on this continent's sombre horizon.

British rearmament, though still in its infancy, proved today strong enough to shift the center of gravity in European dominance from Paris to London as the powers were informed that the League of Nations council would not meet in Geneva, but in London, to settle the gravest dispute between France and Germany that has arisen since the war.

The dispute is still fraught with disastrous possibilities, because German troops, originally called "mere symbols" by Hitler, are still pouring into that Rhineland demilitarized by the Treaty of Versailles, and because French troops are still pouring into that vast subterranean line of fortifications which constitutes the country's first and last line of defense.

Anything can happen at any moment along that line, and while statesmen attempt to arbitrate, an accident might at any moment plunge the continent into a war which neither side wants.

But now, at any rate, arbitration appears possible. Because the British induced the French to consent to shift the venue of the court from place—Geneva, which Germany considered impossible—to place—London, where Germany might consent to be heard, might even consent to appear.

The court will nominally be the council of the League. Really it will be Britain, especially now that the council has been called to meet in London Saturday for the first time in 15 years.

The plaintiff is France. The charge is that Germany violated the Locarno and Versailles treaties by sending troops into the Rhineland and repudiating Locarno.

The defendant is Germany. The defense is that France first violated Locarno.

The Treaty of Locarno meant that France and Germany were mutually

Defend Coal "Bootleggers"

Washington, Mar. 11—A demand that Congress take immediate action to curb labor saving machinery, and a defense of the "coal bootleggers" of Pennsylvania's anthracite region, was placed before the House Labor Sub-Committee today by Representative Gilden, Democrat of Pennsylvania.

The sub-committee is to investigate replacement of workers by machinery, and a special Labor Department agent will make an annual study of the problem.

Protesting any delay in considering legislation, Gilden said that Earl Humphrey, president of the Independent Anthracite Miner's Association had refused to appear at hearings because he thought no action would be taken. He proposed a limitation of machine hours, a 30 hour week limitation, and a workers' retirement system.

"Jafsie," his daughter, Mrs. Myra Hacker, took passage on the liner Santa Inez, in a surprise move last night. The vessel is bound for New York.

Yardley's Main Street Again Before Council

YARDLEY, Mar. 11—Yardley Borough Council was again faced with the problem of Main street, at its March business session held on Monday evening, in the Council Chamber.

The proposition regarding the draining of the three streets between the Canal and River, namely, Pennsylvania, Bell and Longshore Aves., was laid aside for future consideration.

In the absence of the president, David H. Anderson, who is confined to his home by illness, Robert Barbour, chairman of the finance committee, presided.

Melting snow and ice along Main street has turned the road into a veritable creek bed with holes, 8 to 10 inches in depth, filled to their capacity with water.

Only an expert driver, can travel this thorofare with any degree of safety, without a few broken springs, punctured tires and loosened bolts. The damage is not only to the motorist, but to the pedestrians who travel the side-walks there comes a complete drenching if a passing car slips into one of the veritable "Hen's Nests."

Only a few brave souls who are unaware of the rocky route through the borough travel the mile and half of "Washboard" at a zig-zag pace vowing that never again will they brave the bumps of the state highway through Yardley.

Early in the fall, a number of citizens received a court decision in the Bucks County Court at Doylestown, placing the responsibility for the repair of the street on the State Highway Department. The State in turn refused to assume the liability unless the Dauphin County Court would hand down the same decision. However, according to rumor, a number of promises have been made that the street will be repaired during the spring when a number of other highways will receive the same treatment.

CAPITOL HILL MADE INTO SUBSCRIPTION AGENCY

"Dave" Lawrence Orders All To Get at Least 24 Paid-In-Advance Subscribers

NEW SCANDAL SHEET

HARRISBURG, Mar. 11—The whole of Capitol Hill has been turned into a subscription agency for "Dave" Lawrence's new scandal sheet. Even the superintendent of Public Instruction and the members of the State Police force, never before asked to take part in politics, have been told to go out and get Lawrence twenty-four paid-in-advance subscribers—"or else."

The new publication is a cheap production. It is printed in Cleveland and Pennsylvania printers get none of the "gravy" which Capitol Hill and employes are dishing out so generously to Lawrence.

There ought to be a huge profit in the venture. The State-paid press agents of the Earle administration provide the copy, the State employes get the subscribers—and the rest is "velvet."

Who gets the "velvet"? That's a question. Certainly there is no sign it is going into the campaign funds of the Democratic State Committee.

The new magazine is published by a Corporation—one of the hated "Corporations"—and since it does business in Ohio the State of Pennsylvania has no means, so far as anybody here knows, of collecting even a penny of taxes from it.

The motto of the Earle Administration seems to be "All Corporations not controlled by us, must pay taxes; all Corporations controlled by us are exempt." At least that's the interpreta-

Well-Known Historian Dies at Doylestown Home

Warren S. Ely, one of Bucks county's most widely known residents, noted as a local historian and genealogist, and also possessing a wide circle of friends and acquaintances because of his lifelong prominence in fraternal organization circles, died Monday evening at his home in Doylestown.

Mr. Ely, who was 80 years of age, had been in failing health for several years. Because of his health he relinquished the position he held for many years as librarian of Mercer Museum of the Bucks County Historical Society, and became librarian emeritus.

The deceased was recognized as one of the leading genealogists of the country and his work in this line brought him an acquaintanceship that extended to other countries.

A native of Solebury township, Mr. Ely was a son of the late Isaac and Mary (Magill) Ely. He was educated in the schools in that township and later at what at that time was known as the Lambertville Seminary.

Mr. Ely was recognized as an authority in matters relating to Bucks county history, and in particular the genealogy of its early families.

In line with this investigation Mr. Ely became a member of the Bucks County Historical Society. He was its first librarian.

The deceased in his younger days was much interested in educational affairs, and at one time he served as one of the trustees and directors of the Hughesian Free School in Buckingham.

Fraternally Mr. Ely was connected with Aquetong Lodge, No. 193, I. O. O. F., Doylestown, in which he is a past grand, and Doylestown Encampment, No. 35. In addition to having been secretary of both these organizations, Mr. Ely was representative to the Grand Lodge and the Grand Encampment. For some time he also held the position of District Deputy. Mr. Ely was also a past select commander of the Ancient Order Knights of the Mystic Chain.

Mr. Ely was married twice, first to Hannah S. Michener, a daughter of Hugh and Sarah Betts Michener, and later following her death to Miss Josephine I. Burleigh.

In addition to his widow, Mr. Ely is survived by two children, Mrs. J. Carroll Molloy, Pineville, and Frederic W. Ely, Pittsburgh.

'SOCIAL CREDIT' FIASCO IN CANADA 'DEBUNKS' THE TOWNSEND PLAN

(New York American, March 8, 1936)

The complete collapse of the so-called Social Credit scheme in the Canadian Province of Alberta provides a practical and badly needed lesson for our American advocates, in Congress and elsewhere, of such crackpot impulses as the Townsend Plan.

The parallel between the two visionary ideas is perfect, because Alberta's attempted experiment called for A QUASI-TOWNSEND PLAN.

Under the Social Credit scheme, the people of Alberta were PROMISED "social dividends" of twenty-five dollars a month, just as the Townsend Plan PROMISES to retire millions of elderly people on "pensions" of two hundred dollars a month.

INSTEAD OF SOCIAL DIVIDENDS, THE ALBERTA PEOPLE GET SOCKED WITH EXTRA TAXES.

Not dividends, but a general financial collapse, is the outcome of the experiment.

Mr. M. Grattan O'Leary, an experienced Canadian political analyst, has reviewed the whole Alberta episode in two articles written for the Hearst press.

The boob public, believing in a political millennium, had elected William Aberhart, a school teacher and evangelist, to be their Premier and to carry out his Social Credit platform on which he campaigned.

Aberhart is now in office and in full control of the Government.

But, he lugubriously announces, the inauguration of his Social Credit system will be indefinitely postponed.

The TAXES, however, will NOT be postponed.

The reason for the repudiation of the twenty-five dollar a month social dividend, Aberhart says, is debt and unemployment.

And damfoolishness, he might have added.

It is sad, but these Utopian schemes are all impossible and they are all ESSENTIALLY DISHONEST.

Such plans as this, and the Townsend Plan, can be carried out only by ruinous taxation and inflation, which would prostrate the nation and immediately make the dollar worth no more than a German war mark.

The twenty-five dollar or two hundred dollar a month dividend the public would get would be so worthless it would not buy a postage stamp.

All prices would soar out of sight, wages would be worth nothing, savings would be valueless, and the whole political and financial structure of the nation would disintegrate and result in chaos.

EVEN THE DULL AND DISHONEST MUST EVENTUALLY REALIZE THAT THE TREASURY CANNOT BE LOOTED WITHOUT DESTRUCTION OF THE WHOLE FISCAL AND SOCIAL SYSTEM.

Government is a business and must be conducted on business principles.

Our business, our work, our wages, are all involved in the

Clarence McCoy Will Be Returned to Court for Parole Violation

CAUGHT BY THE POLICE

TELLS GIRLS WHAT IT TAKES TO SUCCEED

Banker and An Architect Address Bucks County School Teachers

REQUISITES THEY FIND

J. Purdy Weiss, vice-president and treasurer of the Doylestown Trust Company, deplores the fact that so many boys and girls are graduated into unemployment. The well known Bucks County banker in addressing a meeting of Bucks County school teachers in Doylestown, Saturday, said that among the prerequisites which boys and girls should have when making their debut into the business world, are neatness and accuracy and a spirit of not being afraid of doing a little work overtime.

Office girls and stenographers, if its "tops" you want to be in the business world, both in your office and in the mind of your employer, don't ever let the one who makes out your pay-check pick up his favorite fountain pen and find it dry. . . .

Don't forget the next time you go to the post-office for the mail to find out when the mails arrive and leave town.

If you work in a bank, mum's the word about all you see and hear. . . .

If you get to work wearing the same frock you had such a lovely time in the night before, well don't discuss it during business hours. . . .

Don't lie awake at nights worrying about not being fast enough—in taking dictation—it's accuracy above all things the boss demands and will get either from you or the next girl who takes your job. . . .

Speaking to about 30 commercial teachers from various Bucks county high schools, at a meeting of the commercial group held in the Doylestown High School on Saturday, a County Seat banker and an architect explained what is expected of high school students in the business world.

Vice-president and treasurer of the Doylestown Trust Company, J. Purdy Weiss, who explained that he has been earning his own living since he was eleven years old and has been engaged in banking for nearly 40 years, deplored the fact that so many boys and girls are graduated into unemployment.

Between four and one-half and five million young people are out of work now chiefly because they can't get the required experience. "There were 4,000 applicants for a single bank examiner's job that I know of," Mr. Weiss cited.

"If the boss needs you to work overtime, don't bang the typewriter as if you were going to break it, nor assume a disagreeable attitude. It's all a part of holding your job which is a job these days."

"If I were a high school teacher I would impress upon boys and girls that they should not waste too much time during business hours discussing 'what a good time they had last night' or the kind of dress, hat and gloves they are going to buy. I don't think there is any time—and still less need—in the business world of today for such talk, particularly when it interferes with their jobs," said Mr. Weiss.

SCOUT HEADS OF NATION TODAY CONVENE AT FRENCH LICK SPRINGS

FRENCH LICK SPRINGS, Ind., Mar. 11—(INS)—Headed by Daniel Carter Beard, world famous Scout leader, national executives of the Boy Scouts of America, numbering approximately 900, will meet here for their Sixth National Training Conference March 11 to 18. The delegates, who will represent every state in the Union, are the "career" men of the Scout organization who give all their time to promoting the spread of the movement. It is the first national convention they have held since 1928.

Many men prominent in all walks of life who devote a considerable part of their time to directing the activities of the Boy Scout organization will also attend the meetings. These include besides Dan Beard: Walter W. Head, of St. Louis, president of the National Council; Dr. John H. Finley, associate editor of the New York Times; Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, a vice-president of the organization; Dr. James E. West, of New York, Chief Scout Executive; and Dr. George J. Fisher, of New York, Deputy Chief Scout Executive, Lord Baden-Powell of Great Britain, Chief Scout of the World, will be represented by J. S. Wilson, head of Camp Gilwell, training center for Scout leaders in England, and John A. Stiles, Chief Executive Commissioner of the Boy Scouts Association of Canada, will represent that organization.

The main objective of the meetings will be the formulation of plans for spreading the Boy Scout movement even wider among the youth of the land than has been done in recent years. Complete, detailed reports on all phases of Scouting will be given by the members of eleven major commissions. Of greatest importance among these will be the report on the progress made toward achievement of the Ten Year Program Scouting plan to have at least one out of every four American boys equipped with four years of Scout training by 1942.

UNUSUAL WINTER SERIOUSLY DAMAGES MANY HIGHWAYS

Portion of Durham Road, Between Midway and Hellings Corner, Closed

"ROAD BOILS" DANGER

Vehicles Often Mired When Striking Soft Spots Due to Frost

Unusual weather conditions of the current winter have resulted in considerable damage to highways of the state and some of those in Bristol Township.

Durham Road, section between Midway and Hellings Corner, was closed to traffic yesterday, due to frost raising sections of the roadway and making it dangerous to travel. One large truck in attempting to avoid holes yesterday afternoon became mired and attempts to free it continued late into the night. A large State Highway truck and a crew of men went to its aid.

Traffic is being re-routed through Newportville and Hulmeville while repairs are being made. The section has been barricaded at those two points and men remained at intersections throughout the night with warning lanterns warning motorists what route to take.

Main arteries of travel, particularly the Lincoln Highway, are in deplorable condition, while a number of the side-roads feeding the principal highways, are even worse.

Heavy trucks lumbering over Route 1, 24 hours a day have cut the paving to pieces. Big holes dot the highway.

Motorists are warned to proceed with caution over the Durham Road because of "road boils" which occur at frequent intervals and which often lead to the vehicles sinking down, sometimes hub-deep.

In Bristol Borough not as much damage as expected was done to the borough streets. There are some holes, of course, but Borough Engineer, John S. Roberts, Jr., stated today that the damage was not as great as expected.

State Highway Department workmen have been filling-up the holes in State Road as fast as the frost has been showing its effect.

Repair work is promised on State Road as soon as weather conditions are favorable.

Heavy truck traffic appears to be increasing through Bristol and this is believed due to the condition of Lincoln Highway.

Damage to highways is general throughout the state.

Heavy traffic will be barred temporarily from more than 700 miles of improved roads in the State as Department of Highways' engineers seek to minimize damage resulting from the spring thaw, Secretary Warren Van-Dyke announced today.

Signs limiting the weight of vehicles are being placed on this mileage which, although still intact, may be permanently damaged, unless heavy traffic is diverted while frost is coming out of the ground. Department experts point out that a single truck of unusual weight would be sufficient to seriously damage a subgrade during the thaw.

Rigors of the winter have caused much damage to highways—so much, in fact, that no accurate estimate can be made until the thaw is completed. However, a casual inspection has shown much "heaving." These repairs alone will represent a more than average outlay, and thus every effort is being made to save still other roads which might be imperilled by excessive weights.

One hundred and eighty-three sections of highway are included in the 700 miles to be posted. Some restrictions will be necessary in almost every county. Detours will be provided for heavy traffic, and in no case will the limitation be in force more than ninety days.

Most of the mileage, however, is on the rural system where lighter types of construction prevail. Major routes will be affected in only three locations: The Lakes-to-Sea, U. S. 322, in two locations in Crawford county—between Hartstown and Conneaut lake, where the limit will be eight tons, and between Mercer county and West Mead township lines, where the limit will be ten tons, and the Roosevelt Highway, U. S. 6, between Hawley and Milford, in Pike county, where the limit will be ten tons.

HUMANE TREATMENT PAYS

Under the title, "Livestock Loss Prevention," the American Humane Association publishes a booklet that deserves wide distribution among farmers, shippers, truckers and all livestock handlers. It shows how these interests can save money, and, if it puts an end to cruelty, so much the better.

The estimated annual loss of beef resulting from improper handling in shipment, is 4,000,000 pounds; of pork, 5,000,000 pounds. These figures are furnished, not by humane enthusiasts, but by the head of one of the great packing companies.

The cure must come from public education rather than from legislation and rule making. The evil has existed a long time and there is plenty of law.

But both the loss and the cruelty result from carelessness and ignorance. Fatted animals have been cared for and pampered on the farm. The change to spending two or three days tossing about in trucks and cars in the care of strangers would be sufficient to cause them great distress. When to this is added the needless menace of crowding, danger of falling on slippery floors, being bruised by angry drivers and gouged and snagged by protruding bolts and nails in truck racks and cars, the damage done is easily understood.

The humane societies and livestock associations are co-operating in creating public sentiment to mitigate these evils. As they succeed, money will be saved and suffering of dumb animals will be lessened.

NOT ANOTHER HOLIDAY

The suggestion comes from abroad that a day be set aside in the year to be called World Peace Day and celebrated by all nations of the earth. It means well, and beyond that there is not much to be said in its favor. Peace is a condition of the spirit, not to be fostered by lip service and formal occasions.

There is a further objection. Although Americans celebrate fewer holidays than most, we already have so many that they appear largely to have lost their meaning. On the eve of New Year's Day a sizable part of the population signalizes its resolution to be better boys and girls by becoming tight. It was in Chicago on the day of Valentine, patron saint of those in love's tender thrall, that the opposition stood seven of Mr. Bugs Moran's men up in a garage and let them have it. We honor the dead on Memorial Day by thronging the highways in vast numbers and creating a new lot of dead. On Labor Day we do not labor. On All Saints' Eve we dress up like denizens of the nether world. The celebration of Thanksgiving customarily draws to a close not in an atmosphere of thankfulness but of soda bicarbonate and regret that we ate too much.

As the old recipe for rabbit pie points out, let us have world peace first and then celebrate it.

Mussolini Claims Sanctions Should Be Cancelled

pledged never to attack each other. Germany says that when France signed the Franco-Soviet Treaty, she promised to attack Germany if Germany attacked the Soviet Union, and therefore France nullified Locarno.

Britain is judge, because she is so powerful that both France and Germany want and need her before either can act against the other.

Britain now says Germany did legally violate Locarno by sending troops into the Rhineland, but in equity Germany had the right to do so, because the Rhineland is her own territory.

Thereby, Britain, having equally placated and antagonized both sides, becomes the perfect court, and it is her purpose in London to achieve a compromise that will keep peace in Europe if only for a few years.

British official as well as unofficial opinion is that time now works with Britain and France against Germany. Until the British rearmament program began, Germany could believe that time worked for Germany, because until a year ago no country was rearming so fast and so effectually as Germany.

Today all Germany's opponents are rearming equally fast, and because they are so much more numerous, as time goes on Germany will become relatively weaker although actually stronger.

The British are just as convinced as the French that Germany, as the chief "have not" of the continent, is the first power likely to revolt against the "haves."

The British are also completely resolved—as Foreign Minister Eden's statement in the House of Commons showed when he said Britain would stand by France if Germany attacked—to oppose any German revolt beyond her borders.

The heavily rearming British know that time works for them, therefore they want to placate Germany now at any price. The French would want to also if they thought they could rely completely on Britain, but they are uncertain whether they can so rely.

So it is the British task in the scheduled conference in London to convince France that Britain will stand with her against any German aggression, and at the same time persuade Germany to accept terms which would not seem to curb her ambitions in the East, but which would effectively do so.

All this is based in the assumption, fostered by Nazi literature, that Germany intends to expand by attacking the Soviet Union. And this in turn is the whole background of the Franco-German dispute, since no Frenchman believed Germany would always consent to demilitarization of the Rhineland, and no Frenchman thinks Germany wants to make war on France today.

Nevertheless, because France remembers that Germany fought off the whole world for four years, she is desirous of having a complete ring around the Nazi armies, and today she is fighting mad because Germany tried to break the ring by sending troops into the Rhineland to force France to give up the Soviet link in the chain.

Contrary to any report, France still demands sanctions against Germany, and Britain still insists there is room for negotiation.

The fact that London was chosen as the place to thresh out the dispute gives Europe more room for hope as well as negotiation than had seemed possible before.

Nevertheless, troops keep marching.

Capitol Hill Made Into Subscription Agency

tion Capitol Hill employes, maced into going out and gathering in the subscriptions, place on it—and are they mad!

Furthermore, the Republican State Committee has direct and conclusive evidence that "Eddie" Jones either doesn't know what is happening in the PWA department over which he rules with a high hand, or he deliberately falsified when he recently replied to Senator Vandenburg by asserting there is no politics in relief in Pennsylvania.

The Republican State Committee has incontrovertible proof that PWA workers—some of them enrolled Republicans—are being told they must go out and get Lawrence twenty-four dollars' worth of subscriptions—"or else."

The plain inference is that if these poor people who have barely enough to keep soul and body together do not come across with the sum named—and come across promptly—they will be dropped from the payroll.

As a matter of fact, school teachers in all parts of Pennsylvania, foremen of road work, as well as all PWA workers are being dragooned by the Lawrence-Guffey-Earle machine into becoming subscription agents for the Lawrence scandal sheet.

Meanwhile the newspapers of the State, accused by the loud-mouthed Lawrence of being owned and controlled by "Big Business," are calling upon Lawrence to produce proof of his accusation or admit he is deliberately attempting to libel the free press of Pennsylvania.

For example, the Montgomery-Bucks Newspaper Publishers' Association has adopted a resolution protesting against "Lawrence's declaration as a gross, malicious, deliberate and knowing misrepresentation of the facts."

This Association, one of the largest in Pennsylvania, "demands from Chairman Lawrence such evidence as he can support of his wilful defamation to unbiased judges, or, in the absence that he retract his libel against the free publishers of Pennsylvania, giving to such retraction the same publicity as he caused to be accorded to the original libel."

It looks as though Lawrence had taken in entirely too much territory. His fellow Democrats at the Capitol say he "talked out of turn" and has driven newspapermen to believe that most of the stuff put out by the Democratic press agents is of the same quality as this manifest falsehood.

"DAUGHTERS OF VENUS"

by ROBERT TERRY SHANNON

CHAPTER XIX

When Juliet and O'Hara reached the hospital they found Von Guerdon present in Madame Hubert's barren white room with its glazed surfaces and antiseptic smells.

Someone had brought in several of those enamelled uncomfortable chairs common to hospitals. They were ranged on either side of the bed for the visitors.

Surprisingly McSpadden was present, seated stiffly, his face and hair looking startled and grief-stricken simultaneously. It was evident the battered but indomitable little woman planned a major conference with her general staff. On her still white bed was a pile of unopened letters—this day's mail.

"No use trying to talk her out of it," Von Guerdon told the new arrivals in a cautious voice. "She even made the nurse phone her office and have the letters brought down—"

He lifted a despairing hand to indicate his helplessness.

Not much of the Madame was visible because she was covered to the chin, and her head was a smooth bullet-shape of white bandages. The lids were closed, the arched nose had the look of a dead Pharaoh, the skin had something of the crepey texture and coloring of a Sumatra tobacco leaf.

As Juliet looked at her she was reminded, shockingly, of a glass-encased mummy in the Metropolitan Museum. Suddenly Madame Hubert opened her eyes.

"Well, don't stand there staring. Sit down all of you!" she wheezed irritably. "Let's get on to business."

Juliet and the rest permitted themselves a slight easing of tension and took chairs. Von Guerdon's keen eyes never left his patient's face as he took the chair nearest her head.

"I want it distinctly understood," he said metallically, "that you hold this meeting at your own risk—over the emphatic objection of myself and the entire hospital staff. It's unheard of!"

There was an awkward silence, broken timidly by Juliet.

"Are you quite sure you feel well enough, Madame?"

"Feel well enough! I don't feel anything at all. That's one advantage of being paralyzed. My body might be made out of wood, or not exist at all. It never was much of a body—and it is less now. But there is nothing the matter with my brain—and don't forget it! Do me a favor O'Hara—get that deathbed look off your face."

Her dark eyes, brightly polished with intelligence, flashed at the general manager, who indeed, had been looking like a pall-bearer.

"I was just thinking," he lied, "how remarkably well you're holding up."

"Certainly I'm holding up—and I'm going to get well. I understand they are going to knock this plaster cast off me presently and do a little chiselling on my poor old backbone. Well, let them. I'll be under ether and won't know it. I'll be back with you before you can say scat. Meanwhile though, you have all got to do better than you have been doing. Those outstanding accounts, O'Hara—get busy on them. Threaten those thieves with lawsuits, whoever they are. We've handled them with kid gloves long enough. If they don't pay up, skin 'em alive."

"We've never considered that a wise course," he reminded her gently.

"We've never been in this fix before," retorted Madame Hubert. "Do as I say. Give out to the newspapers I'm only slightly injured, and I don't want Von Guerdon neglecting his Institute patients to hang around this hospital. They've got plenty of good surgeons here and he is needed at the Institute. How long have you been with me, McSpadden?"

"Six years," said the little chemist reverentially.

"That's right—you were with me at the beginning, weren't you? That's why I wanted you here. You men know your jobs and you have got to do them better than ever. The other employees look to you three for morale. I want you to go back and pump the place full of new life. O'Hara here knows, and the rest of you may suspect it—the Institute's about on the rocks. If the customers get wind we're in trouble they'll fly away like a flock of sparrows. The four of you"—and this time the shiny eyes rolled towards Juliet—"the four of you are my corner-stones and you have got to hold up!"

Her voice had risen to a vibrating pitch and Juliet felt a tingle run down her spine. One after another they assured her of their solidity.

Von Guerdon, the least emotional, spoke first.

"To serve you, Madame," he said with a touch of the old Heidelberg stiffishness, "is more than a privilege—it is an honor."

"I'll be there—as usual," gulped McSpadden.

O'Hara, from heaven knows where, dragged up a grin. "Believe me I'll put dynamite under some of those babies."

"You've not been with us long," said Madame Hubert to Juliet, "yet I count on you as much as anybody. More than any of the others you'll be meeting the customers. You'll know what to do, eh?"

"I'll do better than my best," said Juliet earnestly.

"I'm sure you will, my dear," returned Madame Hubert. And then the specter of a smile flitted across her thin lips. "I only hope O'Hara and Von Guerdon don't start cutting each other's throats over you. Oh yes, I've eyes to see. As a matter of fact they have both been love-sick calves for weeks, but it's the wrong time for such pleasures when the ship's sinking. Only my worst enemies would stir up a trouble like that."

"There won't be any trouble like that," Juliet assured her.

"It would be fatal if there was," returned the Madame. "You've power over men—and I'm trusting your discretion. Now, that's settled. What have you heard from the banks, O'Hara?"

There was a perceptible hesitation before O'Hara answered.

"We might as well face facts," he declared. "I hate to tell you this, but they phoned today. They won't extend our loan."

Her face, her eyes, her voice, blackened all at once.

"The swine! Oh the filthy pigs! They think the old woman's down, do they? How much time have we got, O'Hara?"

"Two weeks."

"Two short little weeks, eh? Well, it's time for a lot."

The eyes closed and Madame Hubert was quite still.

Two weeks. Juliet told herself, was time for a lot—time enough for Madame Hubert to die and be buried.

So motionless was the dark and silent little woman that it was like sitting beside a corpse. The bandages, the sterile furnishings, the peculiar carbolic smell common to all hospitals, set up a morbid ache in Juliet.

All of them had been uttering brave words, but only Madame Hubert had believed them. O'Hara, white and grim, was plainly convinced that death was in the room. McSpadden's eyes were wet. Von Guerdon was alert and oddly nervous.

"Hadn't we all better leave now while she's sleeping?" Juliet whispered to O'Hara.

He nodded, and rose quietly. Von Guerdon bent over and picked up Madame Hubert's thin wrist.

Juliet noticed McSpadden. He was on his knees, his face pressed against the bed.

"I—I'm picking my hat off the floor," McSpadden lied, rising.

Madame Hubert opened her eyes quickly.

"I'm like a cat," she said with her astonishing vitality. "I have nine lives. Let us get on with the letters. You, Juliet, read them to me."

"I'm sorry, but I must forbid it," objected Von Guerdon. "You've used up enough strength."

"Shut up," snapped the patient. "Get on with them, Juliet."

Von Guerdon shrugged.

"What can I do," he demanded of the room generally, "with a woman like that?"

"You can quit acting like an idiot!" shot back the Madame. "I'm perfectly able to listen to my correspondence. Here—what's McSpadden doing on his knees?"

"I—I'm picking my hat off the floor," he lied, rising.

So Juliet began, and as she read letter after letter in a voice filled with little violin notes, the subject matter grew duller and duller.

Madame Hubert's sharp interjections struck through each letter like sharp arrows. She commanded O'Hara to take note of this, Von Guerdon to act upon that. There were pointed instructions to Juliet too, who waded through a mass of details about shipments and customs, taxes, decorators, raw materials, charge accounts, jobbers' reports, printing and advertising and foreign agencies.

Much of it was incomprehensible, but more flew into the proper pigeon-holes in her mind for Juliet, by now, knew more about the business than any of the others except the Madame and O'Hara.

SLAM-BANG CARD TO BE ATTRACTION TONIGHT

TRENTON, Mar. 11—A slam-bang action card is on tap for Central Jersey wrestling fans at the Trenton Arena tonight. Johnny Ipp has carded Emil Dusek, leading member of the Omaha Riot Squad, to meet the sawed-off Hebrew drop-kicker, Abie Coleman, in the feature two fall out of three, 90-minute time limit contest.

Emil and Abie are two of the foremost aggressive and action providing campaigners in the sport and there is never a dull minute when they get into the ring and square off at each other. They are hustling, bustling and speedy matmen and never back up. Neither man has ever given a bad performance here and now, pitted against each other a real humdinger is anticipated.

Abie's drop-kick is a potent weapon and he uses it with devastating effect. He has tremendous power in his piano-like legs and when he thrusts them forward with his entire weight in back of them, it bodes ill for the recipient of the charge.

Emil has perfected the Indian Death-lock until he uses it in much the same manner as Chief Little Wolf. When Emil clamps on this deadly grip it is usually curtains for his victim.

A semi-windup of unusual interest is carded between Scotty McDougall, eccentric bare-footed veteran, and George "Crybaby" Koverly, Hollywood badman. This should be one of the roughest and toughest battles ever contested here.

Ivan Managoff, powerful Russian-American, and Ed Meske, Ohio State champion, meet in the feature 30-minute time limit bout, and John Swenski, long a rowdy here, tangles with Tony Colesano in the opening contest.

Tells Girls What It Takes To Succeed

he demands from potential job seekers, is that they have a sound religious faith.

Included in the requirements were personality, cordiality and an attitude on the part of the worker as if he or she really enjoyed earning their living at that particular type of work.

Speaking of bank employment, Mr. Weiss pointed out that one of the first rules of bank employes' ethics is that no matter what one sees or knows about other people's affairs the knowledge must be kept strictly confidential.

"Thus far," continued Mr. Weiss, "you have noticed that I have not said a word about speed. Any secretary who can take 80 words a minute need not fear on that score. Another quality is the ability to do hard work. To keep a job today the worker must work hard and expect to do that in the face of enormous competition which assails from all sides."

Mr. Weiss, a member of the Doylestown Rotary Club, read for the benefit of the teachers the recent news letter which Doylestown High School students published in a national publication with advice on "Getting Along With Others."

Declaring that the paramount issue in the place of commercial students in the business world today is that of adding to an office a human side, which so often it lacks, Fred F. Martin, young County Seat architect, said:

"Most commercial students lack a sense of business etiquette. They don't seem to realize that they are the ambassadors at large for the business. There is a definite need for courtesy on the part of office girls over the telephone, in person and by letter."

Aware of their own deficiencies, most office girls will admit they lack a decided knowledge of business English, with reference to punctuation and also spelling.

"Many girls lack the ability to adjust themselves to certain office routine with ease and adaptability after they have been familiarized. It is exceedingly tiresome to tell a girl to do the same routine day after day.

"When you are busy and sit down to sign a letter, which you have just dictated, and discover that the fountain pen is dry, it is a bit annoying. Then, too, after the girl has been going to the post-office two or three times a day for some time, she should have natural curiosity enough to learn when the mails arrive and leave."

The importance of banking, that is writing checks properly and making other financial transactions on paper because most of the world's business today is being done with the credit system on paper, should also be a part of an office girl's training. . . .

Minor office duties such as the ability to order a dozen pencils by writing a courteous business letter merely at the mention of the employer's suggestion, "order pencils, please," should prove no hardship for the wide-awake girl who graduated from a four year high school business course, and yet many a busy man has to take time out to dictate letter after letter of this type.

"I challenge any business man in Doylestown to tell me off hand how many words a minute his secretary can take in shorthand or run off on the typewriter. But what every business man wants from an office girl is accuracy regardless of speed."

Mr. Martin pointed out that an interesting mental change is taking place among office girls. "In the '20's they could easily get jobs with good remuneration and change positions as easily, but today girls seems to realize that one of the inheritances of man is poverty and to overcome it one must work and do that work well.

"Some times when a secretary brings back a letter to me and I find that I have dictated glaring mistakes in grammar, I think we men ought to be put back into school to be the equal of the secretary we employ," said Mr. Martin.

Miss Gladys Clymer, Doylestown High School commercial teacher, presided.

Election of officers of the group resulted in Paul Brown, Bristol, president; Ella Bond, Morrisville, vice president, and Mabel Fretz, New Hope, secretary.

George P. Eckels, a former instructor in the University of Pittsburgh, and Frances Bowers, director of the commercial educational department of Teachers' College, of Temple University, spoke at the sectional meeting in the morning and afternoon respectively.

stability of our government, in its competent and conservative business management.

Citizens are stockholders. If the stockholders try to loot the bank, the treasury collapses and the stockholders are overwhelmed in the collapse.

We can legitimately get only what we earn.

Greedy schemes to grab more are not only DISHONEST but are doomed to failure in A CATASTROPHE WHICH INVOLVES US ALL.

Alberta wanted unearned social dividends.
It got unemployment, added taxes, debt and disaster.
We are having a taste of similar conditions here.
Let us hope the disaster will be avoided.
